FENWAY

Red Bull brings extreme skating event to Boston.

WKND

MATT HULL, NATIONAL FEATURES EDITOR

Fenway Park is typically the home of hot dogs and home runs, but the famed ballpark is getting quite the extreme makeover this weekend. Red Bull is bringing its high-octane Crashed Ice event to the historic venue, a pretty wild competition in which downhill ice skaters race at high speeds down a 2,000-foot track. I can barely skate around the Frog Pond, let alone a giant hill in the middle of Fenway Park, so to me, this event is both exhilarating and definitely anxiety-inducing. However, fans who stop by should have a blast, so flip ahead to learn all about this icy competition.

Now that Super Bowl weekend is over (for another year, at least), the second full weekend of February is rife with all kinds of TV goodies for audiences to check out. From the 61st Annual Grammy Awards on CBS to the midseason premiere of AMC's hugely popular "The Walking Dead," here's what to watch on TV this weekend. ANDREW HUSBAND

"ONE DAY AT A TIME"

Feb. 8 on Netflix

Norman Lear's reimagining of the TV series of the same name, "One Day at a Time," returns to Netflix for season 3 on Friday. "PATRIOT ACT"

NETFLIX

Feb. 10 on Netflix

Also returning from a brief hiatus is comedian Hasan Minhaj's post-"Daily Show" program "Patriot Act." The topical series, which made headlines over the break when Netflix pulled an episode critical of Saudi Arabia from subscribers in the region, follows along as the comic performs a "Last Week Tonight"-esque deep dive into various subjects. New episodes will debut every Sunday on the streamer for the foreseeable future.

"2 DOPE QUEENS"

Feb. 8 at 11 p.m. on HBO

Following the official end of the podcast and the first run of HBO specials in 2018, Jessica Williams and Phoebe Robinson's comedy variety series is back for another four episodes. This time around, they will focus on "Fashion," "Nostalgia," "Music" and "Regal AF." Celebrity guests include Lupita Nyong'o, Daniel Radcliffe, Janet Mock, Lizzo and Keegan-Michael Key. Each entry will also feature a slew of up-and-coming stand-up comedians.

61ST ANNUAL GRAMMY AWARDS

Feb. 10 at 8 p.m. on CBS

This Sunday night, singer Alicia Keys will host the 2019 Grammy Awards telecast on CBS. Keys and dozens of celebrity presenters, fellow musicians and otherwise, will spend the evening presenting many of the recording academy's 80 or so trophies to various groups and individuals. And as always, many of the nominees will be on hand to perform selections from their nominated songs or previews of things to come. Kendrick Lamar and Drake lead the pack with eight and seven nominations, respectively.

"THE WALKING DEAD"

Feb. 10 at 9 p.m. on AMC

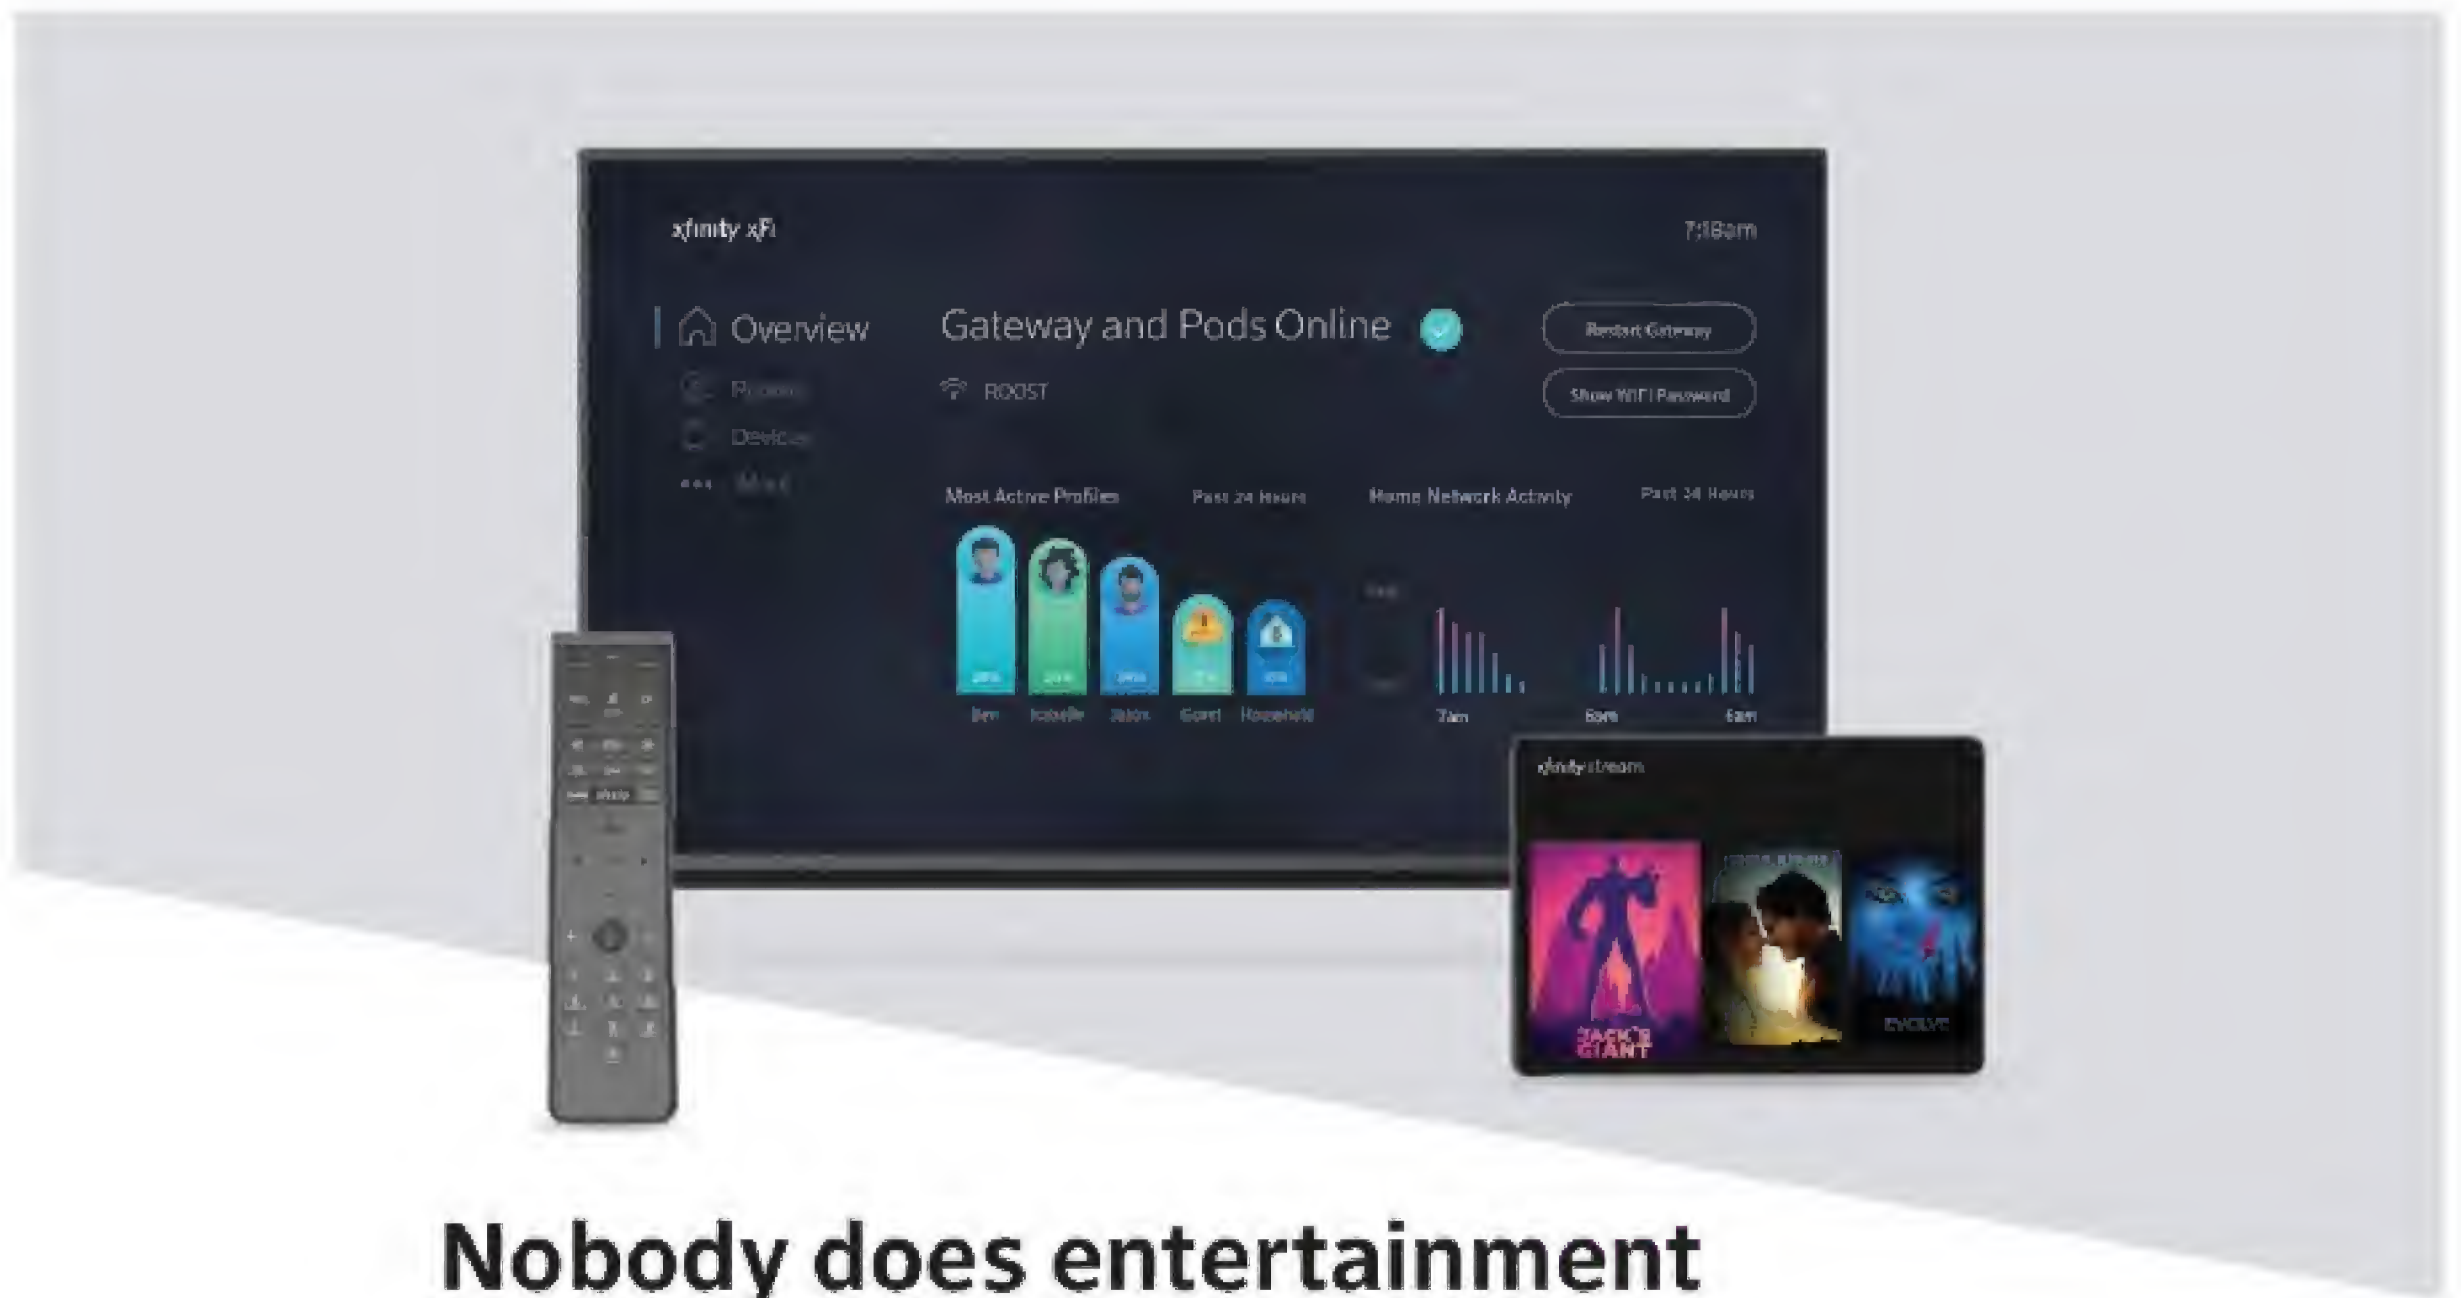

AMC's flagship original series "The Walking Dead" returns from a brief midseason break with "Adaptation," the ninth episode of season 9. Written by Corey Reed and directed by Greg Nicotero, the episode sees the surviving community members coming together after Rick's (Andrew Lincoln) departure to deal with an entirely new threat known only as "The Whisperers."

Red Bull Crashed Ice flies into Fenway

This extreme skating competition takes over Boston this weekend.

MOIRA CALLAHAN

This weekend, professional ice skaters will launch themselves down a hill of ice in Fenway Park at an event created and managed by Red Bull. Intrigued?

We are. It would take a lot more than energy drinks to make us fly down a mountain of ice, but we're not as brave as the people who'll compete at Red Bull Crashed Ice 2019 when it comes to Boston.

"Ice cross downhill is one of the fastest and most exciting winter sports, and we are excited to be hosting it at Fenway Park. We want to thank Mayor Walsh and the City of Boston for supporting our ongoing efforts to present Fenway Park as a year-round entertainment destination," Mark Lev, managing director of Fenway, tells Metro. "[We] also express our gratitude to Red Bull for selecting Fenway Park to host the U.S. stop of Red Bull Crashed Ice."

What is Red Bull Crashed Ice?

The competition is an extreme sport skating event. Skaters speed down a course at 50 mph in order to cross the finish line first.

This year's 2,000-foot track will wrap around the park, giving viewers an even view of the action. The unique shape follows the same path of the baseball field, paying homage to Fenway.

The course also involves steep drop-offs, sharp turns and sudden inclines that launch competitors into the air. Fast, scary and dangerous. We guess that "Red Bull gives you wings" and a lot of courage.

When is it?

The competitions will take place Friday, Feb. 8 and Saturday, Feb. 9, at Fenway Park, 4 Jersey St.

On Friday, the doors will open at 5:30 p.m.

The LCQ Rounds, or the Last Chance Qualifiers, will begin at 7 p.m. This round gives the lower ranked skaters a chance to qualify for the Finals.

On Friday, it will only be the LCQ rounds, the Freestyle Rounds, and the Junior Cup Finals, but not the official Men and Women's Finals which will take place on Saturday. The following day, the doors will open again at 5:30 p.m.

The Opening Ceremony will start at 8 p.m., with the Women's Finals at 9 p.m. and the Men's Finals at 9:15 p.m. By 10 p.m., there will be two crowned winners for the men's and woman's teams. For more information, check out redbullcrashedice.com.

'The Lego Movie 2' suggests 'everything is not awesome'

Will Arnett, Phil Lord and Christopher Miller on building the bricktacular sequel.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

"The Lego Movie" was one of the most surprising movies of 2014.

Originally expected to be gimmicky and hollow, the film was instead funny, charming, beautiful and surprisingly profound. It also made a huge amount of money, so a sequel was always likely.

There was just one problem. The ending of "The Lego Movie" meant a follow-up would be complicated.

At the end of the original it is revealed that the whole animated adventure is actually being played out by a boy named Finn using the tiny figures from his father (Will Ferrell)'s huge Lego set, which he isn't supposed to touch. Ultimately,

The highly-anticipated sequel hits theaters this weekend. WARNER BROS. ANIMATION

Ferrell allows both his son and young daughter to play. But she incorporates Duplo, who in the animated world, announce their plans to destroy everyone.

"We certainly painted ourselves into a corner," admits co-producer and co-writer Phil Lord. "When we added that Duplo thing, you think that's a good and fun twist ending, not a good sequel springboard."

"It was an interesting challenge having audiences understand that this takes place in the imagination of the human world," adds his collaborator Christopher Miller. "Being able to dynamically play with the interplay between the live action human world and the imagination Lego world created some interesting opportunities in inventive storytelling."

Will Arnett, who voices the Lego version of Batman for the third time in the franchise, always knew Lord and Miller would find the perfect way to merge the animated and live-action worlds while delivering a powerful and important message.

"They do a really good job of capturing that Lego, for so many millions of children, represents a time of blind optimism and creativity," says Arnett. "You remember back to times where you were just able to play in this incredibly creative unencumbered way. Building stuff and creating your own world. They've really captured that."

"Then they've set that against, you know, as we get older we live in a world where it's encouraged to remove childlike qualities and toughen kids up for the real world. I get that. But don't lose that sense of childlike wonder-ment. Don't lose that playful side. These are good traits for children to have. We shouldn't be so quick to beat it out of them."

That's a sentiment that Lord wholeheartedly agrees with.

"At 12 or 13, you're not so innocent anymore. You're at the crossroads where you can either be a cynic or not and we're making the argument that you can have your eyes open and still try to effect positive change," says Lord. "Because real maturity means that you can listen to other people and have kindness and positivity in the face of a world that you now understand isn't as simplistically ideal as you maybe thought it was."

"We want people to come out of the movie feeling more positive and more optimistic than they were going out and being honest about the nuances of the world," adds Miller. "That's something we didn't get a chance to do in the first movie when we said that everything was awesome. But in real life, everything isn't exactly awesome."

"The Lego Movie 2: The Second Part" opens in theaters Feb. 8.

Ronny Chieng on his 'crazy' comedy addiction

The "Crazy Rich Asians" and "Daily Show" star returns to Boston this weekend.

MATT JUUL

The last time Ronny Chieng was in Boston, the city's many liberal-leaning residents were in desperate need of a laugh.

Just days after Donald Trump won the 2016 presidential election, the comedian and "Daily Show" star was scheduled to perform at The Rockwell in Somerville. Chieng was understandably worried that there might be "weird vibes" in the room, but he was pleasantly surprised by the crowd that showed up.

"I did a small room, one show, and it sold pretty well so it was kind of packed," Chieng tells Metro. "We had a good time at the show. It was comforting. It felt like, okay, whatever's happening outside, on the ground level, everyone seems to be still okay."

Chieng won't have to worry about the vibe in Boston when he returns for a stand-up performance at The Wilbur on Saturday night, as the Hub is still riding high from the Patriots' latest Super Bowl victory parade. While the comic was born in Malaysia to a Malaysian-Chinese family and went to school in both Singapore and Australia, he's also an avid member of Patriots Nation.

Between the ages of 3 and 8, Chieng lived in Manchester, New Hampshire, while his parents were attending a community college in the state. Chieng and his family would often drive down to Boston's Chinatown during their time in New England and, naturally, the comic grew to love the region's hometown team.

As for why he continues to root for the Patriots, it's a mix of nostalgia and his affinity for organizations that run a tight ship.

"The truth is, I just love well-run organizations," Chieng admits. "The Patriots are a very well-run organization. I like the San Antonio Spurs. I liked Manchester United back in the day. Just well run from top to bottom. I just appreciate the competence."

Since Chieng was too young to experience Boston's acclaimed comedy scene when he lived in New England, he grew to love stand-up during his college years in Australia. Chieng, who has degrees in both finance and law, always wanted to take a crack at comedy and finally ended up on stage when he was struggling to find work in law school.

"At the time, I couldn't get a job because of the global financial crisis," Chieng says. "I was actually getting more work from comedy. I was making a little bit of money as opposed to no money."

Although he initially had doubts about sticking with comedy since he witnessed so many friends get high-paying corporate jobs, Chieng now feels "so lucky" for choosing a path in entertainment. The decision has turned out extremely well for the comic, who now works as a correspondent for Trevor Noah's "Daily Show" and recently created the hit sitcom "Ronny Chieng: International Student." Not to mention, he was also featured in last summer's rom-com blockbuster "Crazy Rich Asians," so clearly he's made the right choice.

Don't expect Chieng to slow down anytime soon, though, especially now that he lives in New York, where he can perform nearly half a dozen sets night after night thanks to the city's collection of esteemed comedy clubs.

"It's the stand-up mecca. You can do so many sets a night," Chieng says. "It's a crazy addiction."

Manslaughter conviction upheld in teen texting suicide

The case raises concerns among civil liberties advocates who say Michelle Carter was prosecuted for her speech.

Massachusetts' top court on Wednesday upheld the manslaughter conviction of a woman accused of goading her teenage boyfriend into committing suicide in 2014 with text messages and phone calls, in a case that drew national attention to cyberbullying.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court agreed with a lower court's 2017 ruling on Michelle Carter, who prosecutors said urged her 18-year-old boyfriend, Conrad Roy, to kill himself in a parking lot about 60 miles south of Boston.

The case, the first in the state to consider manslaughter charges tied to texting, raised concerns among civil liberties advocates who said Carter was being prosecuted for her speech.

But Justice Scott Kafker said the evidence supported a finding that Carter, then 17, "badgered" Roy by phone to get back into a carbon-monoxide filled truck he had stepped out of, after "constantly pressuring" him in text messages to commit suicide.

"The evidence against the defendant proved that, by her wanton or reckless conduct, she caused the victim's death by suicide," Kafker wrote for the unanimous seven-member court.

He rejected arguments by Carter, now 22, that her conviction violated her free speech rights under the U.S. Constitution, saying the court was not punishing her for her words alone, but for "reckless or wanton words causing death."

Daniel Marx, Carter's lawyer, in a statement called the decision disappointing and said he was considering an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Roy killed himself on July 12, 2014, by filling his parked truck in Fairhaven with carbon monoxide from a generator he had hooked up to it.

Prosecutors at trial presented evidence showing that Roy briefly left the vehicle after he began to be overwhelmed by the fumes, but returned after Carter, who spoke with him by phone, urged him to "get back in."

That instruction was captured in a text message Carter sent to a friend. She had, in earlier text messages, encouraged Roy to "promise" to kill himself and helped him plan the event after he abandoned earlier suicide attempts.

Carter, of Plainville, was indicted in 2015. She opted against a jury trial, leaving her fate in the hands of Bristol County Juvenile Court Judge Lawrence Moniz, who found her guilty of involuntary manslaughter in June 2017.

Moniz subsequently ordered her to serve 15 months of a 2½-year sentence in prison. Her sentence was on hold while she appealed.

Blackface, sex assault scandals shake top Virginia Dems

Virginia's attorney general on Wednesday admitted he wore blackface at a college party, becoming the state's third-high-ranking Democrat caught up in scandal since the release of a racist photo from Gov. Ralph Northam's medical school yearbook.

Attorney General Mark Herring said in a statement that he donned brown face paint at a party in 1980 to impersonate a rapper. Northam admitted last weekend to having worn blackface — a practice that dates to 19th-century minstrel shows caricaturing slaves — in 1984 to impersonate Michael Jackson.

U.S. Democrats have become increasingly focused on promoting diversity and rooting out patterns of sexual misconduct in many American institutions. In that context, Northam's admission sparked immediate calls for his resignation from fellow Virginia Democrats and national political figures, including at least five 2020 White House candidates.

A separate scandal relating to Democratic Lt. Gov. Justin Fairfax, who is black and would succeed Northam were he to step down, intensified on Wednesday when a woman accused him of sexually assaulting her at the Democratic National Convention in 2004.

The woman, Vanessa Tyson, in a statement issued by Washington law firm Katz, Marshall & Banks said that Fairfax forced her to perform oral sex on him in a hotel room at the time.

"I cannot believe, given my obvious distress, that Mr. Fairfax thought this forced sexual act was consensual," Tyson said in the statement, which was published by multiple U.S. media outlets. The law firm did not immediately respond to a request for a copy of the statement. REUTERS

TRAVEL

I flew to Vegas for the price of two cups of coffee

Your Vegas getaway is just a latte away.

Fodor's Travel

Have you heard these mythical stories of people flying all over the world and sipping champagne for pennies on the dollar? Well, it ain't a myth. From short domestic hops in economy class to international itineraries in first class, it's possible to do it all on the cheap with the help of credit cards. And no, I don't mean paying for trips with credit cards and going in debt. I'm referring to rewards cards that earn points and miles, which you can use to cover the cost of flights and even hotel stays.

"But credit cards are bad!" one might say. Yes and no. If you're organized, financially responsible and pay all your bills on time, they can be a tool you can use to heavily subsidize your travels.

Las Vegas is a city that screams money. The giant hotels, the neon lights, the casinos aren't cheap, especially if you include the cost of a flight on top of what you do in the city. However, flying to Sin City can cost you almost nothing with the help of just one credit card. Here's how I flew to the fabulous Las Vegas for the price of a couple cups of coffee.

Several months ago, a musician I enjoy announced a U.S. tour, which included Salt Lake City, where I live. However, the date he was supposed to be playing a concert in my hometown didn't work for me. I had planned an international trip and was supposed to be out of town. Upon looking over all the tour dates, I noticed that he'd be playing a show in Las Vegas, which is within drivable distance from Salt Lake City, on a date that worked for me. Of course, I didn't want to drive seven hours each way by myself, so I decided to fly.

Southwest Airlines

operates a base in Las Vegas, and often it isn't hard to find an inexpensive fare between the two cities with the airline. At the time, the flights were only $49 each way, which further solidified my desire to fly—it would've cost me more money to drive.

But why would I pay $98 when I can use miles? If you aren't familiar with Southwest and Rapid Rewards, its frequent-flyer program, the program is revenue-based. What this means is that the number of miles needed to book an award flight directly correlates to its cash cost. The cheaper the flight is, the fewer the miles you need to book it.

So, my round-trip flight to Las Vegas ended up costing me just 5,058 Rapid Rewards points + $11.20 in cash. The cash portion of the cost amounted to fewer than two Caramel Macchiatos from Starbucks (including sales tax and tip). I ended up staying with two friends whom

I hadn't seen in about six months and had a wonderful time at the concert. Executing this journey would've been more difficult logistically had I not had access to airline miles.

You might be wondering how I obtained Rapid Rewards points to make the trip happen. There are three ways to earn them: by flying Southwest, of course, by holding a co-branded Southwest credit card or by holding a bank credit card that earns flexible points. In my case, it was the latter option—I have the Chase Sapphire Preferred Credit Card that partners with Southwest, and I can transfer Ultimate Rewards points I earn with this card to the airline's rewards program at a 1-to-1 ratio.

I already had some

Rapid Rewards points in my Southwest account, but as cheap as it was, I didn't have enough for a round-trip flight. I transferred the remaining points I needed from the Chase Sapphire Preferred Card, which was an instant transfer, and off to Vegas I went.

As a new cardholder, you will earn 50,000 Ultimate Rewards points after spending $4,000 in the first three months of opening an account. If that sounds like a lot, think about where your money goes. You can easily meet the spending requirements by paying bills, groceries and car expenses with the same card for a few months. You will earn double miles on all your dining and travel purchases, which will help you earn the points even faster and reach your travel goals sooner.

Booking a domestic trip on Southwest Airlines is one of the easiest ways to book travel for little out-of-pocket expense. With more research, you'll find that you can use credit cards and miles earned with them to book premium cabins on long-haul flights to Europe and Asia without altering your spending habits too much.

The more organized you are, the easier it'll be to make your travel dreams a reality. Pick a destination, find out which airlines fly there and which points or miles you need to get you there and sign up for a card that offers those miles. You're now steps closer to your goal. ANYA KARTASHOVA

Reasons credit cards rule for family vacations

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Ever come back from a family vacation feeling like you need a vacation? All the planning, packing, kid-corralling and sightseeing can make adventure time an exhausting time.

Here's a tip: Try thinking of your credit card as an efficient little suitcase. If you have the right one, you can unpack a bundle of time — and money-saving benefits that can make your family trip easier.

Get treated like a VIP at the airport

Many travel credit cards come with an annual fee — but if you're traveling with a family, it might still save you money.

The Chase Sapphire Reserve offers complimentary Priority Pass Select membership, which lets you and a limited number of guests relax in one of over 1,000 airport lounges worldwide. Most such lounges are equipped with some variety of food and drink, which can save you a few bucks and the hassle of waiting in line at general airport vendors. At the very least, you can recharge your phone (and yourself) in relative peace.

Of course, that card charges an annual fee of $450. But you can find many co-branded airline credit cards that cost much less to carry, while still offering perks like free checked bags for you and your brood.

The Gold Delta SkyMiles Credit Card from American Express, for example, has an annual fee of $0 for the first year, then $95. It comes with a free-checked-bag perk for the primary cardholder and up to eight companions traveling on your reservation. With airline bag fees as high as $30 each one way, this benefit alone can more than offset the card's annual fee.

Other airline cards, like the United Explorer Card, also offer priority boarding, saving you from the mad dash to get on board.

Tack on a free extra night at the hotel

Some co-branded hotel credit cards — like the Marriott Rewards Premier Plus Credit Card and the IHG Rewards Club Premier Credit Card — will grant you a free night each year after your account anniversary just for having the card. That can easily outstrip the cost of these cards' annual fees, while also allowing you to plan for a slightly longer trip.

It might even free up some of your vacation funds to use toward a special experience or memory-maker on the itinerary that may not have otherwise been possible.

Sleep in on checkout day

If you have a co-branded hotel card, chances are it comes with some type of elite status. This can mean perks like early check-in and extended checkout times. So instead of trying to get everyone up, dressed, fed and packed in an end-of-vacation frenzy, you can make the last hotel day count and move at your own leisurely pace.

Owning a hotel's co-branded card may also give you access to other benefits like free Wi-Fi, concierge services and room upgrades when available — all of which can make your life easier when on the road with kids. ROBIN SAKS FRANKEL

Boston's veteran forward played in his 1,000th game on Tuesday night.

RICHARD SLATE
sports@metro.us

If the Bruins (29-17-7) could go into a laboratory and create the perfect player for today's NHL, odds are that he would not be all that different from center Patrice Bergeron (18 goals, 28 assists in 37 games).

On Tuesday, he played in his 1000th NHL game and fittingly scored the first and last goal as Boston beat the Islanders (30-16-6) 3-1 at TD Garden.

Looking at the impressive number that Bergeron reached in that tilt, you start to understand the rarefied air that he's now in for this Ori-

Who could have guessed in 2003, when the B's selected the Quebec native in the second round (45th overall), that he would become such a model of consistency? He's the 31st guy to play all of his career games (1000+) with one team and only the fifth Bruin to play 1,000-plus games in a Boston uniform, joining Ray Bourque (1,518), John Buyck (1,436), Don Sweeney (1,052) and Wayne Cashman (1,027).

Unless you are a die-hard hockey fan, Bergeron's abundance of skills won't immediately jump off the ice at you. However, when you watch many Bruins games, you are often struck by his almost comical lack of flaws or mistakes. He's won four Selke Trophies and counting (tied for the most in NHL history) — given to the league's best two-way forward. He always has one of the best faceoff win percentages in the league, he is incredibly tough (see the 2013 Stanley Cup Final vs. Chicago) and is also very clutch. So is there anything that he can't do?

Patrice Bergeron has become one of the greatest Bruins of all time.

GETTY IMAGES

"He's a consummate pro, terrific person, terrific hockey player, terrific dad and I assume a terrific husband," said Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy after Tuesday's victory. "All of the above, so I'm very happy that things worked out well for him today and I'm not surprised."

Serious concussions nearly ended his professional career early on but since then, Bergeron has developed into the face of the Bruins. For the last couple of seasons, he's anchored their deadly first line along with left wing Brad Marchand (19 goals, 40 assists) and right wing David Pastrnak (30 goals, 34 assists). Nagging injuries have forced him to miss 16 games already in this campaign but you still feel when Bergeron is in the lineup that the Bruins always have a good chance to win.

Marchand and Bergeron are close friends from their time with the Bruins along with playing for Team Canada together. At this point, nothing that Bergeron does can really surprise Marchand anymore. "Did you really expect anything else? That guy just steps up in every situation, you know that he's going to have a big game on a milestone night like tonight. It was great to see, he's one of the top players in the game and he steps up in big moments. He did that again tonight."

Whenever he retires, Bergeron is a lock to have his number 37 retired in the Garden rafters and the more time goes by, the stronger his résumé becomes for inclusion in the Hockey Hall of Fame as well. Regardless, he's come a long way from the 18-year-old kid who made the jump right to the NHL and has never looked back on his way to becoming a Boston sports legend.

PICARD
@DannyPicard

When Julian Edelman was selected in the seventh round of the 2009 NFL Draft by the New England Patriots, not many would've believed we'd be asking, in 2019, if he's worthy of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

But since that's what we're doing, allow me to chime in with the correct answer.

Yes, Edelman is a Hall of Famer. He confirmed that in Sunday's Super Bowl win over the Los Angeles Rams.

Edelman was named Super Bowl MVP, becoming the seventh wide receiver to claim that prize. He finished the game with 10 catches for 141 yards, which included a critical 13-yard gain during the Patriots' game-winning touchdown drive in the fourth quarter, the only touchdown drive of the Super Bowl.

I'd argue that an offensive player shouldn't have received the MVP in a 13-3 game, but MVP or not, Edelman's importance on the field jumped off the screen, as it usually does.

It didn't jump off the screen when the Patriots drafted him as an undersized quarterback out of Kent State. In fact, Bill Belichick really didn't even have an exact plan for Edelman when he drafted him.

In Edelman's book, "Relentless: A Memoir" with Tom E. Curran, he describes the phone conversation with Belichick when he got drafted: "Hey, this is Coach Belichick. We are going to draft you. We really don't know what you are going to play but we know you can play football."

"But we know you can play football." Unbelievable.

It's like at the end of your fantasy football draft when you've got a couple rounds left and you're just picking players because you have to. There's no purpose. The pizza is gone. The beers are finished. "Yeah, I know he can play football. I'll take him because I just want to go home."

Obviously, Belichick takes his late-round draft picks much more seriously than a fantasy football GM. But you get the point. Edelman was never supposed to be in a Hall of Fame conversation. Much like a sixth-round pick out of Michigan was never supposed to become the greatest quarterback of all time. But here we are.

Unlike Tom Brady, though, Edelman had to change positions to achieve his greatness. More than anything else, that's why I believe Edelman should one day be bronzed in Canton with Brady and Belichick.

Championships are also a factor for me, sure. And not only championships but championship performances. Edelman has three Super Bowl rings, and in those three Super Bowl wins, he's combined for 24 catches for 337 yards and a touchdown. Now he has a Super Bowl MVP to go along with it all.

In 18 total playoff games, Edelman has a total of 115 receptions for 1,412 yards and five touchdowns. Still, you don't even have to look at those numbers to know that he's been Brady's most reliable target throughout the Patriots' last three championship seasons.

Edelman is an unstoppable force as a receiver, especially when the stakes are at their highest. By now, anybody who watches football

UMass Boston Research Study, funded by the National Institute on Aging

Approved by Institutional Review Board at UMASS Boston and Executive Office of Elder Affairs

Senior children (aged 65+) and their parent (aged 90+)

You are part of a growing group, but we don't know much about you. We want to learn what your relationship is like, what challenges you may face, and what support you may need - also if your parent has dementia, how that has changed your relationship.

- In-person interview with you at a place of your convenience
- You'll receive $40 as a thank you

Learning about your experience will help us better understand how parents and children age together. Your contribution will be greatly appreciated.

EDELMAN IS A HALL OF FAMER understands that. But the most impressive part of Edelman's Hall of Fame résumé that I'm currently laying out for you is the road he took to becoming a dominant wideout.

Not only did he come to New England as a college quarterback, but he was thrown into the fire on the defensive end during his first couple years with the Patriots. And not just in any old meaningless situations.

Belichick had the confidence in Edelman to play him on defense in the 2012 AFC Championship Game (2011 season) against the Baltimore Ravens. The story wasn't that Edelman was playing defense. He had already done both with the Pats that season. But Belichick gave him the cornerback duty of covering Anquan Boldin — the same Boldin who probably should've been named co-Super Bowl MVP with Joe Flacco the following year.

Aquib Talib was originally given the assignment of covering Boldin, but Talib got hurt in the first half and never returned to the game. In the second half, Edelman took over Talib's defensive responsibilities. The Patriots won the game but then lost to the New York Giants in Super Bowl XLVI two weeks later.

There should be little dispute that Julian Edelman is a Hall-of Famer, writes Danny Picard. GETTY IMAGES

Still, Edelman's defensive contributions that season made it clear he was willing to do anything to become a successful NFL player.

Since, he's worked his way into being much more than that. He's now officially joined the Hall of Fame conversation. And in my book, he's ready to be enshrined. Not just for his three Super Bowl rings, but also for his journey along the way.

I mean, from special teams to defense to receiving, what hasn't he done in the NFL? He's even thrown a touchdown pass in the playoffs — a 51-yard toss to Danny Amendola in the Patriots' 2015 Divisional Round win over the Baltimore Ravens.

The naysayers might point to his four-game PED suspension earlier this season. If this were baseball, Edelman would be placed in Cooperstown purgatory. But if I had a vote for the Baseball Hall of Fame, I wouldn't hesitate to induct the likes of Roger Clemens, Barry Bonds and Manny Ramirez. Not for a second.

So for me, Edelman's PED suspension — while it does need to be mentioned — doesn't change a thing.

I've been describing the Belichick and Brady era as the greatest dynasty in the history of sports. They began in 2001, and they're still here. Belichick and Brady are the biggest reasons for that. But next on the list of dynasty importance is Edelman. I even put him ahead of Rob Gronkowski, who should also one day be Hall of Fame-bound.

The funny thing is, Edelman's résumé is still not complete. Maybe he'll add another Super Bowl ring to his list of achievements.

Even if he doesn't — and I say it with confidence — if it's the Hall of Fame we're talking, I believe Edelman belongs.
